Registration is now open for the fall term of classes at the Museum of Modern Art's People's Art Center, 21 West 53 Street. Classes, which meet for 15 weekly sessions beginning September 24, are offered for children, teenagers and adult amateurs.

Classes for children under 12 introduce them to a variety of experiences including painting, clay work and three dimensional constructions. Classes for teenagers are principally devoted to painting.

Among special classes offered this year is Ceramics for young people from 11 to 14. This includes use of the potters wheel, hand building and simple glazes. A "3-D" Workshop gives children 10 to 12 an opportunity to work in a variety of materials such as wood, wire and plastics.

Day and evening classes for adult amateurs include Orientation, Painting, Life Drawing, Ceramics, Wood and Stone Sculpture and Pottery. Classes are also offered in photography, glass work, jewelry making and the fundamentals of drawing and graphic expression.

Children are grouped in classes according to age. Openings are available beginning with five year olds. Instruction is individual and based on principles of art education developed by the Museum's Department of Education under the direction of Victor D'Amico.

Tuition fees begin at $35 for children's classes and at $42.50 for adult classes, except for discussion groups which are $20 to $25 per term.

Catalogs of the classes are enclosed.
