OSA BROWN APPOINTED AS DIRECTOR OF PUBLICATIONS AT THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

Richard E. Oldenburg, director of The Museum of Modern Art, has announced the appointment of Osa Brown as director of publications. In this newly created position, Ms. Brown oversees the Museum's publishing program, which produces around eight exhibition catalogues annually, in addition to other books about modern art and the Museum's collections. The Museum has, over the years, published over 500 books on the visual arts and is well known as a publisher of art books of the highest quality.

Ms. Brown comes to the Museum from The Asia Society Galleries, where from 1984 to 1990 she was assistant director and publisher. She served as acting director of the Galleries for seven months. She was at The Metropolitan Museum of Art in the Department of Special Publications from 1975 to 1984. While at the Metropolitan, Ms. Brown produced art books, educational materials, led publication production seminars for museum professionals, and authored The Metropolitan Museum of Art Activity Book (1983).

Ms. Brown is a graduate of State University of New York at Stony Brook, where she earned a B.A. in art history and studio art, and of the Bank Street College of Education, where she earned a Master of Science in Education degree in the Leadership in Museum Education program. Last summer, she attended the Museum Management Institute in Berkeley, California.
