MUSEUM OF MODERN ART PHOTOGRAPHY CENTER CLOSSES FOR SUMMER

The Photography Center of the Museum of Modern Art, which has been housed since November 1943 at 9 West 54 Street, across from the Museum's sculpture garden, has been temporarily closed for the summer months until new quarters can be found for it. The remodelled house which it has occupied has now been put on the market and the Museum expects to find new quarters nearby where the Photography Center can open early in the Fall.

For the summer, photography is represented in the Museum by a large section in the current exhibition Art in Progress. The photography section of that exhibition is shown on the garden side of the Museum building itself at 11 West 53 Street.

The Museum's art library on the fourth floor of the Museum building will be closed Saturdays and Sundays throughout the summer. It will resume its regular schedule after Labor Day.
